Executive Summary

On November 7, 1994, the federal government of the Republic of Mexico declared some 207,000 hectares of land south of the Rio Bravo and the Big Bend National Park as the Canon de Santa Elena Protected Area. This brought a region of approximately 200 kilometers in length, and 30 kilometers in width, under the management of the Mexican federal agency known as SEMARNAP (Secretaria de Medio Ambiente, Recursos Naturales y Pesca), with regional headquarters in La Ciudad Chihuahua. Then in September 1998, Vidal Davila, Chief, Sciences and Resource Management Division at Big Bend, requested preparation of a bibliography of scientific and natural resource studies of the Canon de Santa Elena area. Michael Welsh, principal investigator (and author of the Administrative History of Big Bend National Park), commenced a program of scholarly research to identify these sources.

Two issues became apparent in the collection of materials on the Canon de Santa Elena project. First, few studies had been undertaken of this area by Mexican government agencies or scholars (this is in contrast to the better-studied Maderas del Carmen Protected Area in the State of Coahuila). In addition, consultation with libraries on-line revealed few sites with collections substantial enough to merit a visit by the principal investigator for the purposes of the draft preparation. The principal investigator traveled to Chihuahua to meet with regional officials of SEMARNAP, with scholars of natural resource policy at the universities in Chihuahua, and with librarians and archivists at the Chihuahua campus of El Instituto Tecnológico y de Estudios Superiores de Monterrey (ITESM), and El Centro de Información del Estado de Chihuahua (CIDECH). Much valuable information was gathered there that constitutes the core of this bibliography.

The principal investigator also conducted research in person at the DeGolyer Library at Southern Methodist University (one of the most complete private collections on Mexican natural resources in the Southwest). On-line research was conducted in the libraries of the University of Texas at Austin, the University of Texas at El Paso, the Universidad Autónoma de Ciudad Juárez, and the unified catalogues of the University of New Mexico, the University of Colorado at Boulder, Colorado State University, the University of Wyoming, the University of Northern Colorado, and the Denver Public Library.

Introduction to the Subject Matter

The materials identified by the principal investigator reflect the modest focus of scholars and public agencies in Mexico and the United States on the Canon de Santa Elena area. There is no overview of the natural and cultural history of the area; in fact, the textbooks and general-interest sources cited in the bibliography rarely provide in-depth coverage of the state of Chihuahua east of Ciudad Juarez. Thus the principal investigator reviewed any and all sources that made mention of the large expanse that now constitutes the Canon de Santa Elena protected area. These included several distinctive studies by the Universidad Nacional Autonoma de Mexico (UNAM), conducted in the 1940s, in and around Manuel Benavides. These studies assessed the poor condition of health care in the area, informed by the statistical analyses of the bibliography (census and agricultural studies). This suggests that World War II was the first time that the federal government in Mexico City devoted resources and time to gathering information about life in the future protected area.

Research Area

The Canon de Santa Elena protected area is part of the Chihuahuan Desert biome, with a great diversity of natural and cultural resources. The region served as a zone of frontier defense for the Spanish province of Chihuahua in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, with the ruins of the ancient presidio of San Carlos still visible near the community of Manuel Benavides (renamed from San Carlos in 1928 for a former mayor killed in the Mexican Revolution of 1910-1917). The environment includes the Sierra Rica (a center of mining in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries), and the small river communities of Santa Elena and Nuevo Lajitas (across the river from the Texas town of Lajitas). The highest point in the area is the Sierra Rica, at 750 meters (2,347 feet).

History of the Canon de Santa Elena Protected Area and Big Bend National Park

The idea of a bi-national natural preserve along the Rio Grande began in the early 1930s, when private individuals and local officials in Texas sought means to improve an economy devastated by the dual traumas of drought (the famed "Dust Bowl") and the Great Depression. When the presidential administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt promoted its "Good Neighbor Policy" to improve relations with Mexico and other nations of Latin America, the idea of a joint venture gained momentum, along with the effort to establish Big Bend National Park on the Texas side of the river. This idea met with substantial early enthusiasm, given the intentions of Mexican President Lazaro Cardenas (1934-1940) to strengthen his country's commitment to natural resource protection. Several studies were made of the area south of the Rio Grande, but the focus of these surveys was on the Coahuila portion of the international park (the Sierra del Carmen south of the village of Boquillas). There were no roads running west from Santa Elena at that time, and San Carlos was served only by a dirt road to Ojinaga. There also were no large private ranches in the Canon de Santa Elena area; hence there were no hunting preserves that might attract international tourists.

For these reasons of aridity, isolation, lack of transportation, and the distance from the state capital in Ciudad Chihuahua, Mexican officials rarely ventured into the Canon de Santa Elena area. In addition, employees of the National Park Service and the Department of the Interior continued to work with Mexican officials in the state of Coahuila throughout the years 1940-1980 to strengthen connections between the two countries. Not until the movement in the late 1980s and early 1990s to set aside the large protected areas did the state of Chihuahua decide to join the planning process. From this would come the 1994 declaration of the Canon de Santa Elena protected area.

Methods Used to Compile the Annotated Bibliography

The principal investigator traveled in June 1999 to Ciudad Chihuahua, to meet with officials of SEMARNAP, and to collect materials in the libraries of ITESM-Campus Chihuahua, and CIDECH. He also traveled in November 1999 to Dallas, Texas, to conduct research in the DeGolyer Library at Southern Methodist University; one of the premier collections of Mexican natural and cultural history materials in the Southwest. On-line searches of libraries at the University of Texas at Austin, the University of Texas at El Paso, the University of New Mexico, La Universidad Autonoma de Ciudad Juarez and the "Prospector" network of libraries in Colorado and Wyoming, revealed that few works on the Canon de Santa Elena protected area could be found. The principal investigator then decided to prepare the annotated bibliography with the sources from these libraries without visiting their collections to elaborate upon the sources beyond the descriptions provided on-line.

Sources of Information and Their Locations

Because of advances in on-line research, the sources identified in this bibliography can be entered into standard library search engines for review. The libraries at the University of Texas at Austin, the University of Texas at El Paso, the DeGolyer Library at Southern Methodist University, the ITESM-Campus Chihuahua, and CIDECH are the most valuable for any researcher interested in sources on the Canon de Santa Elena protected area.
